On 20 August 1952 the North Korean Military Mobilization Bureau registered all men between the ages of 18 and 35 in Pukch'ong-gun (128-22, 40-15) (DV-4655) for military service. Of the 300 men in the area who were required to register, 80 failed to register. Bureau teams of two employees each toured the rural districts to issue registration certificates. Men who registered were given physical examinations and oral examinations on their political views.
